“A contemplative, richly imagined, and...
thrilling exploration of the near future.”

–Kirkus Reviews

In a reimagined present day, two athletes find themselves in NYC for World Day—a sporting event meant to celebrate international peace.

For years, Sabine was regarded as a tennis legend, until an act of violence threatened her life and career. Now, she is determined to stand before the crowds once again a winner. Sandy is the beloved star of his hometown baseball team, but a recent horrific antisemitic crime nearly unravels him.

Their lives are forever changed when a massive terrorist attack strikes World Day. As Sabine and Sandy emerge from this destruction, their journeys take them across the Atlantic and back again, where they come to understand how they are each connected to the attack—connections veiled by shocking family secrets and geopolitical motivations. After these revelations, they'll have to decide if their love and friendship can bridge a path forward.

In striking resonance with today's rising antisemitism, Amerikaland tells the emotional story of people battling their histories and charting their own fates.
